Alex Presnell, 25 years old, Burdette, Ark. makes no claim to histrionic distinction, but his action following inhalation, or attempted inhalation, of a cockle burr while gathering corn and the subsequent removal of same from his windpipe were not unlike Petrova's portrayal of "The Shulamite," wherein she imitates that voluptuous damsel as well as the Boer who chokes her and, resembling also, to some degree, the same imitation by Gertrude Hoffman at the Orpheum last week or Venita Gould this week, who stages the scene between choker and chokee in far-off Shanghai.

Gasping for air and in considerable inconvenience, Presnell arrived in Memphis seeking relief. He was immediately laken to the office of a throat specialist and after the throat was deadened with cocaine, a tube with a small electric light in one end was passed into the windpipe through the mouth and the burr disloged and removed by means of a long slender forceps. Presnell, went on his way, happy, and in possession of what his companion said was the largest cockie burr in Arkansas, now, fortunately for him, in an extranot intra-trackes habitat.

Hat Styles To · Cover Widest Range Known

Hats for milady this spring and summer will cover in addition to the head the widest range in styles over known, the latest dictators in fashion say. The mode will range from the flamboyant, drooping variety to the chic and cunning toque in design while there will be no strict color motif, for chapeau creations will be enlivened by every known combination and scheme. This is really the latest from Paris.

M. J. Starr, of Bry's millinery department, returned to Memphis Monday afternoon after a seven weeks trip to Prance and the fashion centers. He declared Tuesday morning that his purchase this season included 225 designs and styles—thus assuring those of distinct tastes that a purchase of a hat means that the next day the wearer won't see her neighbor step into her car with an identical article gracing the head.

Over $50,000, or a very material increase ofver former years, is the sum expended by Mr. Starr for European hats for 1920.

Regarding the economic conditions in Europe, the present exchange situation and other matters of which Americans express very wide opinions as to difference, Mr. Starr summed it up in one sentence: "Europe is much better off in every

"Europe is much better off in every respect than the United States."
He auticipates a material decrease in exports from this country. This year is given as a period in which serious developments will arrive by Mr. Starr. While in Great Britain he investigated conditions. In confinental Europa he visited Paris, Monte Carlo, Nice, Coblenz and other points. From all he reports not only prosperity but a condition that in his eyes makes it appear that the war is past 50 years. Production at present, according to Mr. Starr, is 70 per cent of normal. All classes have money and they are spending it, he declares.
